

Posts I Didn't Read

The Magic Circle Jerk's inspired contest which is rewarding a prize for the most boring post is wonderful. I'm sure all of us have tried to determine which ones they are. It's also funny to see the Cafe powers scramble - No new registrations and I've seen a number of legitimate posts trashed. Trying to find the MOST purposefully boring post is a seriously manly challenge.

Anyway, this made me think of those posts by Cafe regulars that were of no interest prima fascia. There are thousands. These come quickly to mind:

- How I developed my Buns of Steel - S Brooks
- Brevity is the soul of wit (4 pages) - B Palmer
- I'm not one to say much, but..... - J Townsend
- Do you think the left side or the right side of Steve Brooks' ass is sexier? - M Chris
- Humility, probably my BEST asset - P Chosse
- My humility is better than Chosse's - T Wayne
- Live and let live - D Scribner
- Steve Brooks are a gnius - xxxxx (grammar host)
- Joe Porper and I* - P Biro

* Sorry, I lost interest in this before I could finish the title.

A Familiar Stench In Blogland

For much of my, too long, life I've been around lawyers. Personally, I consider the legal profession to be the most harmful enterprise this side of being the Enron CFO. Yeah, I know there are exceptions - Damn Few!

Over the past few days, I believe I've seen this evil slithering through the blogs, extorting a serious toll.

I'm convinced things will never be the same.

Another notch on the bed post for the bad guys.

Nothing new, I'm afraid.

I'm taking a break.....

More Of The Same

I long ago quit posting on the Cafe, after I was banned. It's easy enough to get another set of IDs, but it's just not worth it. I have nothing I want to post, that's within the Round Man's rules anyway.

I do enjoy reading the posts on a periodic basis. Unfortunately, when I read posts I remember why I detest these people some much. As I write this, there's a post in the Tech area asking about editing ones own posts. Actually, if you look, this question has been asked more than once. That pompous Chief of Staff will invariably reference something else, implying that the poster was too damn stupid or lazy to do it himself. This time he says:

Here's the explanation from the rules and etiquette forum.

It goes on to cite Brooks terminally boring missive and says you can only edit within the 1st 30 minutes and then only if no one has responded.

There's two things seriously wrong here:

1. This rule is buried deep in the bowels of a massively dull post by Mein Brooks. Only a person that could eat raw slugs wouldn't have spit up well before reaching this point.
2. More importantly, here's the Cafe F.A.Q on the issue:

You may edit your own posts at any time, unless the topic is locked. Just go to the thread where the post to be edited is located and you will see an edit icon on the line above your message. Click on this icon and edit the post. No one else can edit your post, except for the forum moderator or the Magic Cafe administrator.

You see, Mr. Chief, we're not as stupid as you continually imply.

FIX YOUR F.A.Q

take care

The Continuing Saga

Whit Responds:

I've been marginally covering this story since Magician X and MagiCentric are way ahead of me on the curve. Also, I trust I've left no doubt that I dislike the Whit Haydn that appears on the Magic Cafe. He's mean, condescending and just plain rude. I can do without that.

Magician X has posted the first commentary on the long awaited response here. It's a good read. Please be aware that this thread has been purified by the guards at Stalag Cafe. Unfortunately, I didn't have the foresight to grab it earlier.

It's an interesting story. It will be interesting to watch it play out.

I only have one comment here. Whit's blaming the blogs for the problems seems to be totally misplaced.

Drivel & Drool

One of the posts I didn't see on the revised thread were comments from a good ol' boy from Tennessee calling anonymous posters cowards. I believe this was in a couple of posts. Let's see if I can't explain this so he can understand it:

Let's say you're in the cabin enjoying a chaw and you hear a noise outside. It's Pa Kettle - mad as hell, standing there with his loaded musket. He's calling you out and wrongly accusing you of messing around with Ma Kettle out behind the privy.

You're not gonna take it, so you go get your gun and when you start to load it you find that Pa Kettle sent his fat, ugly brother-in-law over and took your bullets.

Now you have two choices - you can walk outside unarmed and get blown to smithereens or be a coward and sneak out the cellar, so you can live to fight another day.

Which one you figger you're gonna do?

Get it?!

Coming Soon?

Louis Falanga wrote the following in 1988 in his Publisher's Preface to M.I.N.T. Volume 1:

Volumes 2 and 3 ill be released within the next year or two.

Well, volume 2 was issued in 1995 and Volume 3 has never been published.....
The best laid plans.....

I don't even know why I'm mentioning this, but I find it interesting that magicians think they will always deliver more and sooner than they actually do. I'll bet 75% of the magic web sites I see haven't been touched in a year. I can't recall a prepublication offer that delivered on time.

Doesn't anybody in magic have a calendar?

Drivel & Drool

Sometime last week the Magic Cafe celebrated its fourth birthday. Somewhere I saw Brooks wrote some self congratulatory bull shit, recounting for the 100th time the beginnings of the board and his mission to help the downtrodden ...blah....blah....blah.

To be fair to this round mound of pomposity he did start something which has become quite a phenomenon in our strange little corner of this cyber-world:

- Unequivocally, the Cafe is the most important destination for magicians on the Internet. For some reason the sheer momentum of the Cafe has managed to crush all competition.
- No other destination attracts the large number of quality posts that he has at the Cafe.
- Technically, it works. Downtime is at a minimum. Speed is generally very good. His technical people know what they are doing.

Why then do so many of us absolutely loathe the Cafe and its perpetrator? Actually, I've thought a lot about this. Is it jealousy? I certainly don't think so. Personally, I wouldn't want the headaches and I sure as hell don't want to look like him.

I think it comes down to fairness. When a destination like the Cafe becomes so large that there are no alternatives, those operating it are, rightfully, held to a different standard. This is a lot like eBay. There are hundreds of auction sites on the net - name two! At the end of the day, there's a little moral compass in MOST of us that demands fairness of our institutions. I know, I know - life isn't fair, but that doesn't stop most of us from feeling everything that can be, should be.

Go to the Magic Cafe and look at the I want to see the manager section. Look around. How many open posts do you see? How many honest answers? Very few. Can a month go by and nobody have suggestions or comments? Notice how all dialog has been effectively squashed. I commend to you the following post:

<http://www.themagiccafe.com/forums/viewtopic.php?topic=123884&forum=40&1>

Can you feel the sincere frustration of the poster when he titles his post For Pete's sake, let me answer!. Brooks' response says more than I could say in 12 pages. His total dismissal of this nice man's post is morally criminal. I'm sure Brooks accomplished his goal as the poster has left and never returned.

The infamous Sweet and Sour fiasco is just another example of the cruel way Brooks treats his visitors. Frankly, closing it probably made sense. His advertisers were getting unmercifully trashed and I'm sure it was a headache. If Brooks would have closed it and made a simple explanation, many people would have missed it, but would have accepted the reality of the situation. Instead, he chose to close it for technical reasons and promised to reopen it. Of course this didn't happen and, personally, I believe it was a blatant lie from day one. His posts regarding it are an insult to anyone with a third grade education - of course, this leaves out the Cafe staff.

Again, in fairness to Brooks - his mantra since day one has been - if you don't like it, Fuck you and Whit's Horse. C'mon Steve, give fairness a spin. If it doesn't work out you can always fall back on doing super market openings as Jabba the Hut. At least you won't have to wear one of those hot costumes!

Everybody into the parlor for cake!

..... Oops, sorry someone seems to have eaten it. I Wonder where it went?

No WOW!

I've been thinking a little more about the convention I just attended and it occurs to me that there was not a single WOW moment in three days. I saw some nice variations and some clever adaptations, but nothing that made me really sit up and take notice.

Is it me, or is everything becoming a tired rehash? I think I saw 5 Silk Fountains - a nice interlude, but FIVE?!

Who's doing the thinking in magic now? Anyone?

Drivel & Drool

Mine's Bigger Than Yours.....

I'm not going to recount the whole Whit Haydn / Whackster thing, except to say I'm really sorry to see this kind of thing happen. Aren't bloggers just insignificant piss ants, unworthy of anyone's attention? Yet Whit, or whoever is posing as him, makes the following statement:

I am a performer, manufacturer and retailer of magic whose reputation for honesty and fairness is being impugned by this blog. It does incredible long term monetary damage to me.

Aw, c'mon. Is this type of legal hyperbole really necessary? Incredible monetary damage? No way. I seriously doubt that what Judge Whackster has to say about Whit would ever cost him a dime. Personally, I would never buy his stuff unless there was NO alternative, as I find him a pompous, overbearing bore ass. Judge Whackster's comments, good or bad, would make no difference to me. I would assume I'm not alone here.

I would think much more of him if he just threatened to use those Roy Rogers boots and kick his ass. Instead we're going to play My Lawyer Is Bigger Than Your Lawyer..... Too bad!
